Exploring the Use of Ontology Based Transformational Services

Why use these services? Millions are suffering in numerous conflicts and humanitarian crises. Our global security is diminishing as threats are expanding. Foreign policymakers, negotiators and others could effectively resolve these challenges using these services because they dramatically expand conscious awareness and communication capabilities. This would make it possible for officials to recognize critical issues unknowingly bypassed that interfere with formulating and implementing successful outcomes. Thus, policies formulated and negotiations executed will produce outstanding breakthroughs.

Who Should Pursue Exploratory Discussions With Consultants

- Officials who are exceptionally serious and responsible about producing unprecedented breakthrough results. They should be the type of person who is open-minded, hungry for solutions, results and progress.

They would be someone who would move heaven and earth to find the solutions they need for their urgent security, humanitarian or other critical challenges. They would be someone inclined to focus on reasons why things can happen versus why they cannot. They would not be someone who is convinced that he or she has all the answers, training, experience, expertise and resources they need. Such officials are their own worst enemy not producing results.

- They would be people interested in heavily pursuing this with us as we would with them. Officials who are continually difficult to reach would not be suitable.
- The appropriate official to engage in such a discussion would have substantial decision making authority or be part of such decisions. We seek to avoid speaking with those who do not have anything at stake except their job.

OIC is ardently advocating the use of ontology based services to highly respected, responsible and important officials worldwide because, [a] they are struggling to resolve the numerous threats and suffering they are committed to, [b] these challenges are threatening the very existence of life on earth, [c] our world has been progressively drifting over the last several decades towards an unparalleled catastrophe as predicted by Einstein in 1948 after the development of nuclear weapons and [d] the services we are promoting have a globally proven track record of supporting breakthroughs in resolving major challenges of all types.

Private sector clients consistently report that the results they produced using these resources were those they hadn't believed were possible.

Note: OIC neither solicits nor will we accept financial or any other form of compensation from any transformational/ontology based consulting company, government, multilateral institution or non-governmental organization that we interface with.
